By 2018, 1 in 20 U.S. jobs will be STEM-related-an estimated 8.6 million jobs in total, yet U.S. employers continue to express concerns over the lack of a skilled workforce in science and technology. Across the nation, we should encourage students to enter STEM-related fields. To capitalize on the economic benefits of existing and undiscovered technologies, we must ensure our future generations are equipped with the skills and abilities to keep our country globally competitive. Proposal: Boy Scouts of America STEM program 2023

Group: Family Resource Centers

Scope of Services

The Boy Scouts of America STEM program will provide a program that is designed to encourage our youth through a series of hands-on experiments, activities and stations to learn. Our program was developed by top scientists at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory through the national office of the Boy Scouts of America, and consists of over 30 hands-on experiments ranging from engineering, forensics, chemistry, robotics and aeronautics. The program is entirely hands-on with experiments for the varying ages and abilities. Experiments range from learning the effects of different times and methods of hand-washing, drawing DNA out of strawberries, learning how different chemicals react, to building robotic rovers to accomplish simple tasks. Participants will find out the best way to protect an egg dropped from a rooftop, and learn about trajectory, velocity and physics with live-action Angry Birds. A treasure hunt requires basic knowledge of finger printing, footprint casting, DNA analysis and problem solving.

The Boy Scouts of America STEM curriculum will engage 40 pre-k and kindergarten children in the Family Resource Centers of New Haven. The STEM curriculum which provides hands on science experiments which promotes critical thinking questions of why, what, why and when. The participation and comprehension of STEM concepts and ideas are a transferable skill which may stimulate their interest in STEM and may be utilize in school settings.

Boy Scouts will provide a program to each Family Resource Center site: Hill Central School, Fair Haven School, and Brennan-Rogers Magnet School. Each Family Resource Center will have 4 sessions each with a total of 12 sessions. Boy Scouts will provide all materials for all experiments and an instructor. A $2,500 fee will be paid by each Family Resource Center with a total of $7,500. Boy Scouts will provide an invoice if needed.

Representatives of Boy Scouts and Family Resource Centers will communicate regularly to review the collaboration and to address progress, challenges, concerns and changes.
